Entrepreneurship has become an increasingly popular field of study in universities across the world –whether it’s offered as a degree program or in the form of a dedicated startup lab.

Being able to identify a problem and come up with your own solution is something sounds fairly easy, but understanding and learning about the characteristics of what makes a good entrepreneur is a challenge in itself.

The opportunity to gain valuable professional skills in a safe space where you can put your learning into practice and benefit from an established support structure is something that many students are making the most of during their university experience. Entrepreneurship Cell conducted a Discussion on whether college is right time to StartUp -Identification of pros and cons musty be done before one dive into startup, one must be certain that it is what one wants to do. Starting a company is very different from working as an employee at someone else’s firm, and many responsibilities and stressors come with the territory. If a person is motivated and inspired to start, one must not doubt itself. However, we need to be double sure about it and not jump in too quickly.
